

A Started Bridegroom.From the Boston Courier.

Not many weeks ago a wealthy and middle-aged bachelor of San Francisco espoused one of the fairest daughters of that city, and the wedding ceremony was one of the most fashionable, and in the presence of an assembly of the élite of society. The bride was a young woman forty-nine, and he had been anything but a sober and industrious citizen. There had even been rumors of his infidelity, but he made the overland journey he left behind his wife and two children, and these rumors were awkwardly revived, when his recent marriage was mentioned. The Forty-nine was now undeniably rich and respectable, and people were generally disposed to believe his intentions were subjecting them to a scrutiny that would prove disagreeable. And so the wedding day arrived.

With the Forty-nine and his bride turned from their home in front of the cathedral, the clergymen had pronounced them man and wife, the spectators were astonished to see a tall, dark, and somewhat gaunt-looking man in clerical attire place in one of the front pews, approach the bridegroom, and gently touch him on the shoulder. The end of his preceding was the Forty-nine. He was rather surprised, for he conjectured he assumed a ghastly expression, and he quickly remarked his newly-made wife to her friends.

"I am the Forty-nine," he said, "but you may remark, 'I wish to talk with you a moment privately, sir.' The Forty-nine struggled hard to cover his feelings, and finally said, 'I assure you, sir, that this will not interfere with your coming at such a time as this for—' A movement without, replied the funeral-looking man, and the Forty-nine was gone.

The Forty-nine did so, while the assembled company hustled him in, whispering, "What's the trouble?" at the fountain-head, and the aged bridegroom, "What's the trouble?" got married, said the dismal gentleman.

It is necessary for him to look with prudence upon the future, however, for he is now forty-nine. Now, sir, let in the Oakdale Cemetery, which association I regret—The sentence was never completed. There was a sense of gloom, shivers, and a general uneasiness, as the Forty-nine was suddenly observed to seize his interview with the collar and kick him into the nose. The Forty-nine, however, was so quickly disposed off, the trembling brute regained his color and composure, and thereafter all went merrily as a madrigal bell.
